4. ABOUT MALAYSIA

4.1 Malaysia, Asia Country

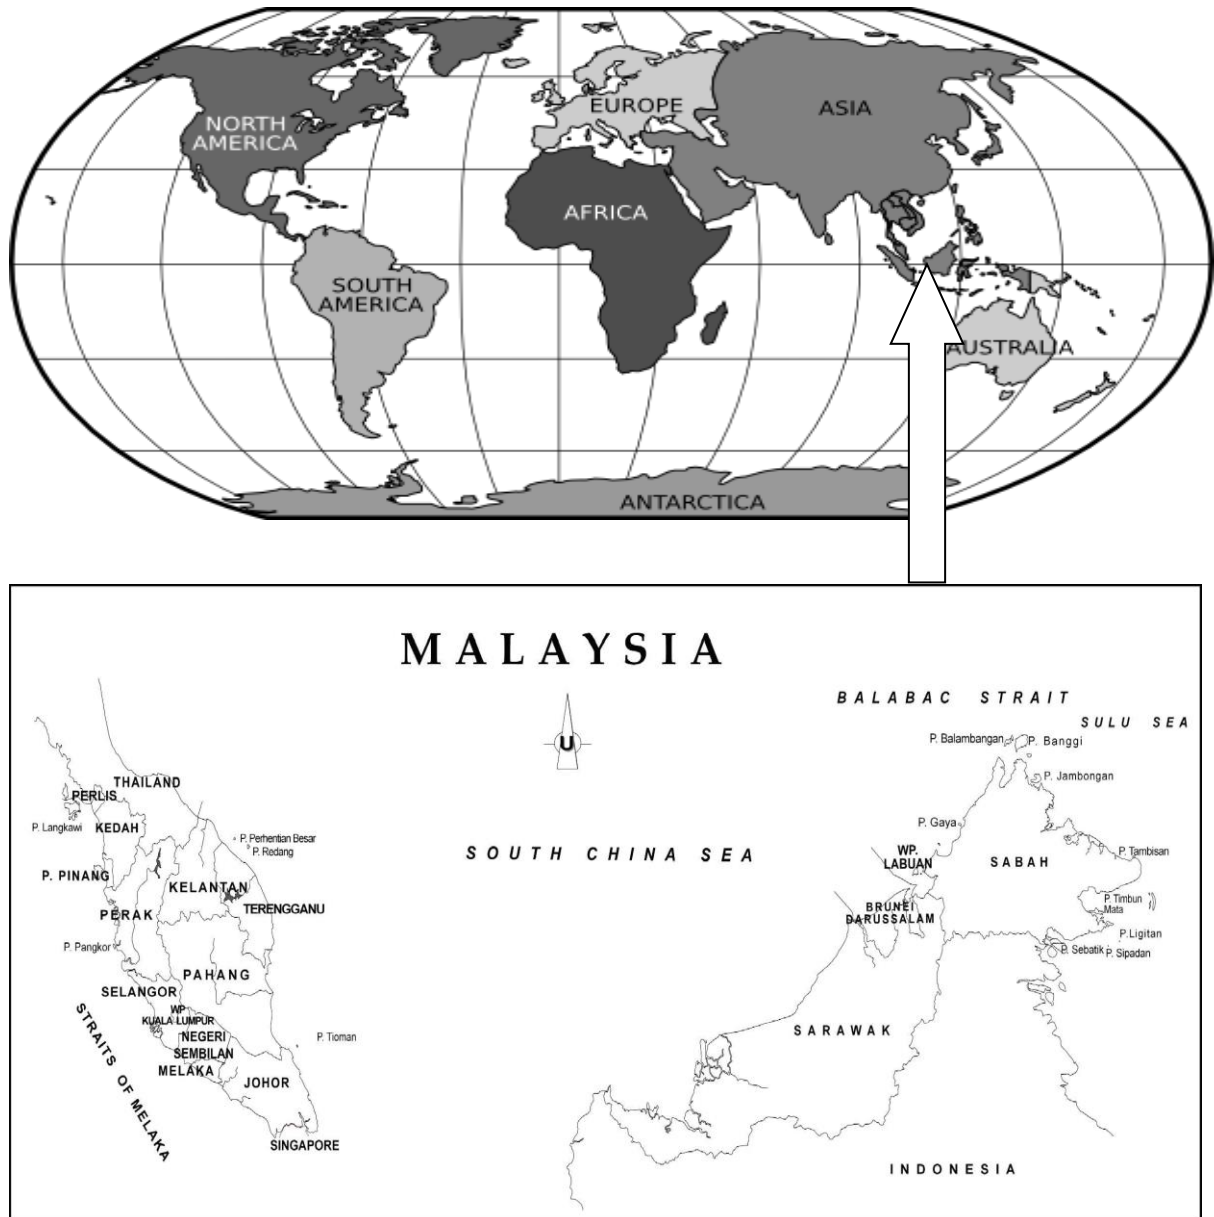

Malaysia is a fascinating nation of over 30 million (by 2015) living within 329,847 sq km of a tropical paradise, situated 7 degrees north of the Equator in the heart of South-East Asia. The country comprises Peninsular Malaysia (West Malaysia) and East Malaysia (consisting of Sabah and Sarawak which are located on the island of Borneo). Malaysia's population mainly comprises Malays, Chinese, Indians, and the indigenous peoples, all of whom live in peaceful harmony. Religion plays a very important part in the people's lives and a large number of mosques, temples and churches can be seen everywhere. The official state religion in Malaysia is Islam but the Constitution upholds freedom of worship.

Malaysia offers everyone something. For the travellers, there are scenic landscapes that range from rustic villages to cool hill resorts (such as Cameron Highlands, sprinkled with colonial buildings, and laden with fruits and vegetables) to a plethora of islands from Langkawi to Redang, known worldwide among scuba-diving enthusiasts and island lovers. To the traveler who tends toward the modern lifestyle, visit eye-catching architectural sensations such as the Petronas Twin Towers (KLCC), one of the world's tallest buildings, and the Kuala Lumpur International Airport (KLIA), one of the most advanced airports in the Asia-Pacific region. KLIA, a blend of futuristic architecture and clear cultural elements within a garden concept, is located south of Kuala Lumpur. The KLIA Express speeds travelers from the international airport to the city of Kuala Lumpur, one of only six cities in the world that offers express train services plying the airport-to-city route.

For the investor, working in Malaysia is relatively easy as it is one of the most developed countries in the ASEAN region. Malaysia is host to the Multimedia Super Corridor (MSC), the world's longest technology corridor, a vibrant ICT hub hosting more than 360 multinationals, foreign-owned and homegrown Malaysian companies focused on multimedia and communications products, solutions, services and research and development. The country's administrative capital, Putrajaya, is one of the world's first "Intelligent Garden City" which runs on an e-platform.

4.2 Studying in Malaysia

Malaysia in world map

Deciding to study in a different country is an exciting life decision. Studying in Malaysia will provide you with a truly unforgettable experience, where you can witness and sample the diverse and fascinating mix of races and cultures. It's what makes Malaysia such a unique place.

This should be the most exciting time of your life, moving to a new country and embarking on a new adventure. More than 2 million people live in Kuala Lumpur, the capital city of Malaysia, many of who are international students.

Even though you are extremely excited about coming to this fascinating country, it is normal to feel nervous about adjusting to a new life and a new culture. At MAHSA University, we have help and support available from the Student Central Office where students are welcome to visit or call for information, advice and practical help.

4.4 Climate

Lying between one and seven degrees north of the equator, Malaysia enjoys a tropical climate. Malaysia has uniformly high temperatures throughout the year. The monthly average maximum temperature ranges from 32- 33° C year in Kuala Lumpur, 31- 33° C in Penang, 29- 33° C o Kuching, and 30- 32° C in Labuan. The monthly average minimum temperature ranges from 22- 23° C year in Kuala Lumpur, 23-24° C in Penang, 22=23° C in Kuching, and 24-24° C in Labuan. Humidity is high at 70%-90% throughout the year which favors light and sweat-absorbent material such as cotton for daily dressing. Generally, Malaysia has two distinct seasons. The dry season occurs during the southwest monsoon from May to September. The northeast monsoon blows from mid-November till

March, which brings about the rainy season (monsoon) to the country. The East Coast of the country is best avoided during these times.

4.5 Clothing

Due to the heat of Malaysia, most Malaysians wear cotton and linen clothes. T-shirts, short-sleeves shirt, short pants, shorts, jeans, sport shoes and slippers are the casual wear for Malaysians. It is unethical to wear yellow, unless you are of royal descent. The traditional dress of this country is quite interesting in respect to the process they use to make clothes. Their traditional clothing is something called "Batik," which is a fabric dyeing method using wax to create patterns.

4.6 Culture

Malaysian culture or Malaya culture is a mixture of Malay, Chinese, Indian, and various indigenous tribes dating back to more than fifteen hundred years ago from a Kedah kingdom in Lembah Bujang with traders from China and India. Other cultures in the past that influenced heavily on the culture of Malaya include the Persian, Arab and European.

Orang Asli and Indigenous People

The indigenous tribes are the oldest inhabitants of Malaysia. They account for about 5 percent of the total population, and represent a majority in East Malaysia of Sabah and Sarawak. In Sabah, the largest official ethnic group is Kadazan, though many unofficially recognised subgroups exist. The same can be said of other ethnic groups, with as many as a hundred racial groups forming the state's population. However due to the fact that many subgroups possess only minor differences, they are not always differentiated. In Sarawak, the dominant tribal groups are the Dayak, who typically live in longhouses if in the rural areas and are either Iban or Bidayuh.

Malay

Malay is Malaysia's largest ethnic group, accounting for over half the population and the national language. By definition of the Malaysian constitution, almost all Malays are Muslims. Traditional Malay culture can still be found in the kampung or village. Malays in different areas of the country speak their own unique dialects that can sometimes be unintelligible to most of their fellow countrymen. With the oldest indigenous peoples, they form a group called bumiputera, which translates as "sons" or "princes of the soil".

Chinese

The first Chinese to settle in the Straits Settlements, primarily in and around Malacca, gradually adopted elements of Malaysian culture and intermarried with the Malaysian community and with this, a new ethnic group called babas (male) and nyonyas (female) emerged. Babas and nyonyas as a group are known as Peranakan. They produced a synthetic set of practices, beliefs, and arts, combining Malay and Chinese traditions in such a way as to create a new culture.

The Chinese have been settling in Malaysia for many centuries, as seen in the emergence of the peranakan culture, but the exodus peaked during the nineteenth century through trading and tin-mining. When they first arrived, the Chinese often worked the most grueling jobs like tin mining and railway construction. Later, some of them owned businesses that become large conglomerates in today's Malaysia. Most Chinese are Tao Buddhist and retain strong ties to their ancestral homeland. They form the second largest ethnic group.

Indian

Indians had been visiting Malaysia for many centuries, but only settled during the nineteenth century. Most came from South India, fleeing a poor economy or by an organised emigration administered by the British authorities. Arriving in Malaysia, many worked as rubber tappers, while others built the infrastructure or worked as administrators and small businessmen. The Indians form the third largest ethnic group of Malaysia.

4.7 Religion

Malaysia is a multi-racial nation composed of numerous different religions due to the various ethnic groups that populate its society. This site will portray an accurate description of the two focal religions in Malaysia: Islam and Buddhism. The unique practices and rituals held by the aforementioned will be discussed. This report will also describe the effect and the importance that religion plays in Malaysia.

Malaysia harbors many different religions including Daoism, Confucianism, Buddhism, and Islam. The majority of the country is Islamic with 61.3%. Buddhism makes up about 19.8% of the population due to the strong ties that Malaysia has to China. Hinduism occupies approximately 6.3% of the population. The other 9.2% of the population is composed of a large number of different religions including Christianity, Daoism, Confucianism, and Shamanism.

There are celebrations for all ethnic groups and religions of people in Malaysia. Also, what makes it more fun is; everybody is involved and invited, and not just for particular groups. Malays invite their Chinese and Indian friends over for Hari Raya Aidilfitri and vice versa. It could be anything; Christmas, Chinese New Year, Deepavali, Hari Gawai or Vasakhi.
